SUBJECT
Ethics Approval 15870: An Investigation of Intercultural Teaching and Learning in Tertiary EFL classrooms in Vietnam

Thank you for your application for ethical approval, which has now been considered by the Standing Committee of the Human Ethics Committee.

Your application has been approved from the above date and this approval continues until 28 February 2011. If your data collection is not completed by this date you should apply to the Human Ethics Committee for an extension to this approval.

Best wishes with the research.

Researcher: Ho Si Thang Kiet, School of Linguistics and Applied Language Studies, Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand

Research title: An Investigation of Intercultural Teaching and Learning in Tertiary EFL classrooms in Vietnam

I am doing a PhD in Applied Linguistics at Victoria University of Wellington (VUW) from 2008-2011. For this degree I am undertaking a research project leading to a thesis. The VUW Human Ethics Committee has granted ethics approval for this study. The project investigates intercultural language teaching and learning in tertiary EFL classroom in Vietnam.

The project is beneficial not only for Vietnamese EFL teachers and students, but also for language teacher educators, government policy makers and curriculum designers. For the benefits of teachers, the project contributes to their professional development for a long-term plan as it helps to enhance their awareness of teaching culture as an integral component of language teaching and develop their intercultural perspectives about foreign language teaching.

I would like to invite you to participate in this study. If you agree, I will observe one of your classes and invite you to participate in a focus-group interview for about 30 minutes at a time that is convenient for you. The classroom observations and the focus-group interview will be looking for your views and classroom practices on teaching English language and culture.

The classroom observations and the interview data will form the basis of my research project and will be put into a written report on a confidential basis. No participant will be identified personally. No other person besides me and my supervisors, Dr. Jonathan Newton and Prof. Janet Holmes, will have access to the data. The thesis will be submitted to the School of Linguistics and Applied Language Studies, and deposited at the Library of Victoria University of Wellington. The results of the research may be presented at academic conferences or published in academic journals. All collected data will be destroyed two years after the end of the project.
Your participation in this study is voluntary and you are free to decline without giving any reason. You may also withdraw from the research at any time during data collection without explanation. The collected data will be destroyed after your withdrawal.

If you have any questions or would like to receive further information about the project, please contact me at SiThangKiet.Ho@vuw.ac.nz or my supervisors, Dr Jonathan Newton at Jonathan.Newton@vuw.ac.nz or Prof. Janet Holmes at Janet.Holmes@vuw.ac.nz, School of Linguistics and Applied Language Studies, Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand.

Thank you for your cooperation.

APPENDIX 7

Teacher interviews (Phase 2)

Lead-in

At the beginning of the interview, the researcher briefly introduces some broad distinctions about ways of approaching culture in language teaching:

Broadly speaking we can identify two approaches to culture in the language classroom. The first approach is to focus on the teaching and learning of information about the target culture obtained through readings, internet, videos and lectures etc.

The second approach is to focus on developing in the learners the sets of skills, attitudes and awareness that will help them to become more effective in intercultural interactions.

It is likely that many teachers use a mixture of these two approaches but equally teachers are likely to favour one approach over the other.

Interview questions:

1. In EFL teaching and learning, what do you understand the term ‘culture’ to mean?

2. Please look at some topics for learning below. Which topics do you consider most important for your students to learn? Please choose one or two of them and briefly describe how you have taught it/them in the classroom.

   Some topics:
   - history, geography, political system
   - daily life and routines
   - music, drama, art, literature
   - cultural images and symbols
   - festivals and traditions
   - values and beliefs
   - types of verbal communication
   - types of non-verbal communication

3. Think about the cultural content in your English textbooks. What are your opinions about it? Please explain.
4. Consider the following ways of culture teaching. Discuss which of these (if any) you often use in the classroom and comment on how you use them:

*Some ways of culture teaching:

- using videos about the target culture
- teaching cultural facts from reading texts
- asking questions about cultural facts
- giving tasks about cultural facts
- discussing cultural similarities and differences
- exploring cultural values and beliefs
- solving cultural dilemmas
- sharing experience about the target culture

Can you recall other ways of culture teaching that you have used in your English classes?

5. Think about your culture teaching approach. Why do you take that approach? What are the benefits of your approach for your students’ learning of English?

6. How much time do you usually spend on your culture teaching? Do you think the time is adequate? Please explain.

7. Are you aware of any emphasis on culture in the curriculum, educational policy and assessment in your educational institution? If any, how is that emphasis represented?

8. Do you think the target culture should be incorporated into English classes or should be taught in separate culture courses? Please explain.

In addition, there will be other specific interview questions that arise from classroom observations.

At the end of the interview, teachers are asked to give their personal information on a slip of paper.

Personal information

Please tick (✓) the appropriate box:

Gender:   □ Male      □ Female

Age:      □ 18-25      □ 26-35      □ 36-45      □ over 45

APPENDIX 8
Student questionnaire

Instructions

This questionnaire is a part of a PhD research project on intercultural language learning in the tertiary EFL classroom in Vietnam. It aims at investigating Vietnamese tertiary English-majoring students’ priorities in EFL learning and their views of the cultural dimension in language learning. As there is no right or wrong answer, please answer ALL the questions as honestly as you can. The data you provide in this questionnaire will be handled on an anonymous basis and will not affect any result of your studies. Please follow the instructions of each question carefully before answering it.

Questions

1. What are your purposes for learning English?

Please tick (√) your 3 most important purposes for learning English from the list (including an ‘other’ option if you specify) and rank your answers in order of importance (3=most important; 2=very important; 1=important).

- □ Reading English documents
- □ Getting a good job
- □ Communication with foreigners
- □ Acquisition of cultural knowledge
- □ Studying in a foreign country
- □ Travelling to a foreign country
- □ others, please specify: .................................................................

2. What is your priority in language learning?

Please rank from 1-4 (4 = most important, 1 = least important) for your priority.

- □ Phonetics
- □ Culture
- □ Grammar
- □ Vocabulary
3. Which topics do you prefer to learn?

Please tick (✓) 3 topics you consider most preferable to learn and rank your answers in order of preference (3 = favourite, 2 = very preferred, 3 = preferred).

- □ History, geography, political system
- □ Daily life and routines (e.g. family life, jobs…)
- □ Music, drama, art, literature
- □ Cultural images and symbols
- □ Festivals and traditions
- □ Values and beliefs
- □ Types of verbal communication
- □ Types of non-verbal communication

4. How important are the following purposes for your culture learning?

Please circle one number for each goal (1 = least important; 5 = most important)

(a) Acquiring knowledge about the target culture

Least important     1  2  3  4  5        Most important

(b) Developing the ability to interpret events of the target culture and relate them to one’s own culture.

Least important     1  2  3  4  5        Most important

(c) Developing cultural awareness of one’s own and the target culture

Least important     1  2  3  4  5        Most important

(d) Acknowledging the value of the identities of others.

Least important     1  2  3  4  5        Most important

(e) Showing respect for otherness, empathy and tolerance towards other peoples and cultures.

Least important     1  2  3  4  5        Most important

(f) Developing communicative awareness of rules appropriate for intercultural communication.

Least important     1  2  3  4  5        Most important
(g) Adapting one’s behaviour to different requirements and situations.

Least important 1 2 3 4 5 Most important

5. What is your experience of culture learning in the classroom?

Please tick (√) any culture learning tasks that you often DO in the classroom. How useful are these tasks for your culture learning? English (1 = least useful; 5 = most useful).

APPENDIX 9
Student focus-group interviews (Phase 2)

Lead-in

Some broad distinctions about ways of approaching culture in foreign language learning can be mentioned as follows:

Broadly speaking we can identify two approaches to culture in the language classroom. The first approach is to focus on the learning of information about the target culture obtained through readings, internet, videos and lectures etc.

The second approach is to focus on developing in the learners the sets of skills, attitudes and awareness that will help them to become more effective in intercultural interactions.

Culture learning can be defined as “the process of acquiring the culture-specific and culture-general knowledge, skills, attitudes required for effective communication and interaction with individuals from other cultures. It is a dynamic, developmental, and ongoing process which engages the learner cognitively, behaviourally, and affectively” (Paige et al., p.177).

Interview questions

1. Why are you learning English?

2. What do you understand the term ‘culture’ in your English learning to mean? How important is this in your English studies?

3. Please look at some topics below. Which topics do you consider most important to learn about? Please choose one or two of them that you have learnt in your English language lessons and briefly describe how you learnt it/them in the classroom.

Topics:

• history, geography, political system
• daily life and routines (e.g. family life, jobs…)
• music, drama, art, literature
• cultural images and symbols
• festivals and traditions
• values and beliefs
• types of verbal communication
• types of non-verbal communication
4. Think about the cultural content in your English language textbooks. What are your general opinions about the cultural content? Are the cultural topics appropriate with your culture? Please explain.

5. Consider the following ways of culture learning. Please state which ways do you often learn in the classroom and give some comments about them.

   Ways of culture learning:

   • watching videos about English-speaking cultures
   • learning cultural facts from the reading texts
   • answer teacher’s questions about the cultural facts
   • doing exercises about cultural facts (e.g. multiple choice, gap-filling, quizzes)
   • discussing and reflecting on cultural similarities and differences between your culture and English-speaking cultures
   • exploring values and beliefs of English-speaking cultures
   • solving cultural dilemmas
   • sharing experiences about English-speaking cultures

   Can you recall other ways that you have been encouraged to think about culture and language in your English language classes?

6. How much time do you usually spend on learning about culture and language in your English language lessons? Are you satisfied or do you want to have more time for culture and language learning in the classroom? Please explain.

7. Think of an interaction you have had with an English native speaker.

   a. Did you encounter any differences with your own culture in his/her way of interacting or behaviour? If yes, what were the differences?

   b. Did you have any communication problem in your interaction with that person? If yes, what was the problem?

8. Do you think English-speaking cultures should be taught in English language courses or only in a separate culture course such as British Culture/American Culture? Please explain.

Thank you for your participation in the interview. Your opinions are very helpful for my research. Best wishes for your study of English.

Description of a sample lesson (Lesson 3: Festivals and Holidays) (Phase 3)

ST class

Objectives:

- To classify different kinds of festivals and holidays.
- To learn about British people’s likes and dislikes about their holidays.
- To learn about how people entertain guests in Japan, Spain and the USA.
- To discuss the disadvantages of businesswomen to entertain male clients in the USA.
- To learn about different criteria in choosing a restaurant.

Activity 1: Talk about festivals and holidays

Make a list of festivals and holidays in your country. Add other special holidays in other countries to your list. Which of the festivals and holidays are religious? Which ones are related to different seasons of the year? Are any of them national days?

Activity 2: Holidays (20 minutes)

1. Mark your holiday preferences in the following table:

2. Read an article about people in Britain going on holiday: ‘We’re just too worried to have fun on holiday’.

We’re just too worried to have fun on holiday

Most people in Britain take their troubles with them on holiday, according to a new survey. 40% said the most important reason for going away is to escape stress, but almost everyone said they worry more than they do at home. Only 4% are happy and carefree. The most common concern is burglary: 4 out of 10 people worry about their homes being broken into while they’re abroad.
More than a quarter are afraid they’ll be upset by noisy holiday makers, and 22% are worried about being mugged. One in five think the car may break down, and the same number are upset about the chances of bad weather.

One in seven people said their idea of a good holiday is sun, sea and sex. A quarter of all young, single men thought this was the best formula for a holiday, according to the MORI survey.

The research showed that the traditional stay-at-home Britain is no more. Three out of every five adults now want to holiday abroad. Three years ago, less than half wanted to go overseas. The hotel holiday is still the most popular. Just over half the people interviewed preferred being looked after to going on a self-catering holiday, despite worries about cheeky waiters and noisy fellow guests!

Questions:

a. Which things are people worried about?

b. Which things do they like about holidays?

Activity 3: Entertaining guests

Read the descriptions of how people entertain guests in three countries. Sumie is from Japan, Rosa is from Spain and Leslie is from the United States.

Sumie

In my country, Japan, usually we invite guests home at the weekend, in the early evening, about seven o’clock. Before they come, we must tidy the front garden and clean the entrance hall. Then we must spray it all with water to show that we welcome guests with cleanliness. The guests usually bring presents and then when they give you the present they say, ‘I’m sorry, this is such a small present’, but in fact they have chosen the present very carefully. When the meal is ready, the hostess says, ‘We have nothing special for you today but you are welcome to come this way’. You can see that in Japan you should try to be modest and you should not show off too much. If you don’t understand our culture you will think this is very strange.

When we have foreign guests we try to serve traditional Japanese meals like sishi, tempura or sukiyaki, but when we have Japanese guests, we serve all kinds of food such as spaghetti, Chinese food or steaks. When guests leave, the host and hostess see them out of the house and wait until their car turns the corner of the street: they wait until they can’t see them anymore.

Rosa

I come from Spain. At home what we love most is going out to eat in bars and restaurants. There is a big choice and you can go from one bar to another trying different things and having a few drinks, usually wine or beer. But sometimes we also like to invite people to our
I usually invite my friends for an informal meal. I cook Spanish omelette, which is made with potatoes, onions and eggs, fried in olive oil. Then we have things like cheese, ham called Jabugo something delicious and worth trying. And then things like olives, anchovies, mussels. We drink wine or beer. Some people may bring a bottle of wine or something for pudding. We usually meet late in the evening, about eight-thirty or nine. Of course we dress casually; we just want to be relaxed and comfortable, and talk and laugh together.

Leslie

I’m from the United States. Sometimes when our family gets together with other families, we have what’s called a ‘pot luck supper’, which can take place in the evening or even at lunch time. This is an informal occasion held perhaps in someone’s garden, so people dress casually, but nicely. Invitation can be written or made by phone, and each person is asked to bring a dish of food. They’re given a choice of starter, main course, salad or vegetable, or dessert. The hostess knows how many of each kind of dish she needs but not exactly what the guests will bring. This is why it is called ‘pot luck’, as it is a lovely surprise, holding a dinner party without knowing what you are going to feed your guests. As the guests arrive, they put their dish, or pot as it is used to called, on the table and the meal is served buffet-style, and drinks are provided, although some guests might bring a bottle of wine as a present.

Questions:

a. What is the same in your country?
b. How do Vietnamese people entertain guests?

Activity 4: This working life

Read an article by an American businesswoman:

In the world of business, it is not always easy for women to do the same thing as men. Consider the following dinner.

In order to do the job well, it’s important to sometimes see clients and business contacts away from the office. In a more relaxed atmosphere, you can get to know your business partner better. In the end, after all, people do business with people they like.

Women start out at a disadvantage because, unless you’re Nancy Lopez or Martina Navratilova, it’s tough to invite men out for a fame of gold or tennis. Men usually prefer to play sports with other men.

You might think that restaurants are the perfect playing field. But they can be dangerous ground. If people from the office see two men they know having dinner together, they think it’s business. If colleagues see a woman dining with a man, they often wonder if it’s another kind of business.
I’m still looking for the perfect solution. Breakfasts are out because I find it impossible to be pleasant at 7AM over a bowl of muesli. I love lunching, but that’s usually a bad time for busy people, especially if they are on the road. So that bring us back to dinner.

One answer is to take another colleague or client to the dinner so that no one can think it a tête-à-tête. Of course, this isn’t always convenient. So when I can’t do this, I take guys out for dinner one-on-one to places where I’m most likely to see colleagues. The more your colleagues see you doing working dinners with different men, the more they know it is part of your business style.

Questions:

a. Do you agree with the writer’s opinions about the disadvantages of businesswomen to entertain male clients? Why/why not?
b. Discuss the two solutions offered. Do you agree with them?

Activity 5: Eating out

1. Which of the following is the most important to you?
a. elegant surrounding
b. lively atmosphere
c. romantic atmosphere
d. good food
e. efficient service
f. low prices

2. Look at the three given situations below.
a. A meal out with your husband/wife/boyfriend/girlfriend.
b. A meal with an important business client.
c. A celebration with a large group of colleagues from work.

Now put the things from the list in (1) in order of importance for you (1=most important) in the three situations.

IC class

Objectives:

- To be aware of cultural influence from other cultures in festivals and holidays.
- To reflect on the lifestyle of Britishers through the way they spend their holidays and their worries on holiday.
- To be aware of cultural norms of entertaining guests in other cultures.
- To learn how to interpret and deal with different cultural norms of receiving guests by people from other cultures.
- To critically evaluate the way businesswomen entertain their male clients in the USA.
- To develop awareness about cultural norms of socialising in the target culture.
Activity 1: Talk about festivals and holidays

Make a list of festivals and holidays in your country and English-speaking ones. Discuss with your partner the following questions:

a. Which festivals and holidays from English-speaking countries have recently become popular in your country?
b. What cultural influence may those festivals and holidays have on your culture?

Activity 2: Holidays

1. Mark your holiday preferences in the following table:

Questions:

a. Which holiday preferences in your country are different from those in Britain?
b. What do people’s holiday preferences in each culture reveal?

2. Read an article about people in Britain going on holiday: ‘We’re just too worried to have fun on holiday’.

We’re just too worried to have fun on holiday

Most people in Britain take their troubles with them on holiday, according to a new survey. 40% said the most important reason for going away is to escape stress, but almost everyone said they worry more than they do at home. Only 4% are happy and carefree. The most common concern is burglary: 4 out of 10 people worry about their homes being broken into while they’re abroad.

More than a quarter are afraid they’ll be upset by noisy holiday makers, and 22% are worried about being mugged. One in five think the car may break down, and the same number are upset about the chances of bad weather.

One in seven people said their idea of a good holiday is sun, sea and sex. A quarter of all young, single men thought this was the best formula for a holiday, according to the MORI survey.

The research showed that the traditional stay-at-home Britain is no more. Three out of every five adults now want to holiday abroad. Three years ago, less than half wanted to go overseas. The hotel holiday is still the most popular. Just over half the people interviewed preferred being looked after to going on a self-catering holiday, despite worries about cheeky waiters and noisy fellow guests!

Questions:

a. What kind of lifestyle do people in Britain have through the way they spend their holidays and their worries on holiday?
b. How is it different from the way people in your country do on holiday?

Activity 3: Entertaining guests

Read the descriptions of how people entertain guests in three countries. Sumie is from Japan, Rosa is from Spain and Leslie is from the United States.

Sumie

In my country, Japan, usually we invite guests home at the weekend, in the early evening, about seven o’clock. Before they come, we must tidy the front garden and clean the entrance hall. Then we must spray it all with water to show that we welcome guests with cleanliness. The guests usually bring presents and then when they give you the present they say, ‘I’m sorry, this is such a small present’, but in fact they have chosen the present very carefully. When the meal is ready, the hostess says, ‘We have nothing special for you today but you are welcome to come this way’. You can see that in Japan you should try to be modest and you should not show off too much. If you don’t understand our culture you will think this is very strange.

When we have foreign guests we try to serve traditional Japanese meals like sishi, tempura or sukiyaki, but when we have Japanese guests, we serve all kinds of food such as spaghetti, Chinese food or steaks. When guests leave, the host and hostess see them out of the house and wait until their car turns the corner of the street: they wait until they can’t see them anymore.

Rosa

I come from Spain. At home what we love most is going out to eat in bars and restaurants. There is a big choice and you can go from one bar to another trying different things and having a few drinks, usually wine or beer. But sometimes we also like to invite people to our home.

I usually invite my friends for an informal meal. I cook Spanish omelette, which is made with potatoes, onions and eggs, fried in olive oil. Then we have things like cheese, ham called Jabugo something delicious and worth trying. And then things like olives, anchovies, mussels. We drink wine or beer. Some people may bring a bottle of wine or something for pudding. We usually meet late in the evening, about eight-thirty or nine. Of course we dress casually; we just want to be relaxed and comfortable, and talk and laugh together.
Leslie

I’m from the United States. Sometimes when our family gets together with other families, we have what’s called a ‘pot luck supper’, which can take place in the evening or even at lunch time. This is an informal occasion held perhaps in someone’s garden, so people dress casually, but nicely. Invitation can be written or made by phone, and each person is asked to bring a dish of food. They’re given a choice of starter, main course, salad or vegetable, or dessert. The hostess knows how many of each kind of dish she needs but not exactly what the guests will bring. This is why it is called ‘pot luck’, as it is a lovely surprise, holding a dinner party without knowing what you are going to feed your guests. As the guests arrive, they put their dish, or pot as it is used to called, on the table and the meal is served buffet-style, and drinks are provided, although some guests might bring a bottle of wine as a present.

Questions for discussion:

a. Discuss cultural similarities and differences in the ways of entertaining guests between these countries and yours.
b. Are there any cultural stereotypes in the way of entertaining guests in these countries?
c. How would you react when people entertain you in a way that is different from your culture, e.g. organising a potluck in which you should bring a plate to share?
d. Cultural situation:

Read the following cultural situation and then do the tasks below.

A Vietnamese couple, Tung and Mai, recently arrived in the USA to pursue postgraduate studies. They met an American couple, Tom and Alice, at the university. The American couple was very interested in learning more about Vietnam and invited Tung and Mai for a lunch at their apartment on Sunday. As Tung and Mai were leaving home, Tom said, ‘We really enjoyed ourselves today. Drop in anytime.’

One month later, Tung and Mai bought a car. While being out on a drive one Friday evening, they realized that they were in the neighborhood where the American couple lived. Tung and Mai stopped by their apartment and rang the bell. A surprised Tom opened the door. He asked Tung and Mai to come in, but kept them standing in the hall while he cleaned up the room. After 5 minutes, Tom asked Tung and Mai to be seated, but offered them no refreshments, saying he had nothing in the apartment. Alice did not appear at all and Tom did not say anything about her absence. The conversation remained rather strained and awkward. Tung and Mai left after 10 minutes, feeling very hurt by Tom’s rudeness and said to themselves that they would not come to his home again.

(Source: Adapted from Cushner & Brislin, 1996, pp.75-76)

Tasks to do:

1. Four students do a role-play about the situation. Two students act as the American couple Tom and Alice, and the other two students act as the Vietnamese couple Tung and Mai.
2. Students work in groups and observe the role-play, then discuss the following questions:
   a. What were the misunderstandings that happened between Tom and the Vietnamese couple? Think about how the other’s behaviour was misinterpreted from one’s own culture.
   b. What would you do if you were (i) Tung and Mai? (ii) Tom?
   c. What can you learn from this situation about how to receive guests at home across cultures?

Activity 4: This working life

Read an article by an American businesswoman:

In the world of business, it is not always easy for women to do the same thing as men. Consider the following dinner.

In order to do the job well, it’s important to sometimes see clients and business contacts away from the office. In a more relaxed atmosphere, you can get to know your business partner better. In the end, after all, people do business with people they like.

Women start out at a disadvantage because, unless you’re Nancy Lopez or Martina Navratilova, it’s tough to invite men out for a fame of gold or tennis. Men usually prefer to play sports with other men.

You might think that restaurants are the perfect playing field. But they can be dangerous ground. If people from the office see two men they know having dinner together, they think it’s business. If colleagues see a woman dining with a man, they often wonder if it’s another kind of business.

I’m still looking for the perfect solution. Breakfasts are out because I find it impossible to be pleasant at 7AM over a bowl of muesli. I love lunching, but that’s usually a bad time for busy people, especially if they are on the road. So that brings us back to dinner.

One answer is to take another colleague or client to the dinner so that no one can think it a tête-à-tête. Of course, this isn’t always convenient. So when I can’t do this, I take guys out for dinner one-on-one to places where I’m most likely to see colleagues. The more your colleagues see you doing working dinners with different men, the more they know it is part of your business style.

Questions for discussion:

a. What do you think about the way businesswomen entertain their male clients in the US? Is this socially accepted in American society? What are your attitudes about it? How is this different from your country?

b. Discuss the two solutions offered. What would you do if you were the American businesswoman? Would you act differently from what you normally do in your country?
Activity 5: Eating out

1. Which of the following is the most important to you in a restaurant? Do you notice any differences about a restaurant between an English-speaking country and your own country (e.g. the atmosphere, the service)?

   a. elegant surrounding
   b. lively atmosphere
   c. romantic atmosphere
   d. good food
   e. efficient service
   f. low prices

2. Role-play: You’re going to eat out in a restaurant in America. Choose one of the three kinds of restaurants below and act out a role-play in front of class. How should you behave in each situation? Do you notice any different norms of interaction with those in your own culture?

   a. A fast food restaurant (e.g. McDonald, KFC)
   b. A casual restaurant
   c. A formal restaurant

3. A situation
   Pair work: Work with a partner and discuss the questions

   You were invited for a dinner at a restaurant by an American friend. The food was good and you enjoyed talking to him/her quite a lot. At the end of the meal, the American only paid for his own food.

   Questions:
   1. How would you react in such a situation?
   2. What norms of socialising should you be aware of in intercultural communication?

TEACHER VERSION

Researcher: Ho Si Thang Kiet, School of Linguistics and Applied Language Studies, Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand

Research title: An Investigation of Intercultural Teaching and Learning in Tertiary EFL classrooms in Vietnam

I am doing a PhD in Applied Linguistics at Victoria University of Wellington (VUW) for the academic intake 2008-2011. For this degree I am undertaking a research project leading to a thesis. The VUW Human Ethics Committee has granted ethics approval for this study. The project investigates the effects of intercultural language learning in a tertiary EFL classroom in Vietnam. The project is beneficial not only for Vietnamese EFL teachers and students, but also for language teacher educators, government policy makers and curriculum designers. For the benefits of teachers, the project contributes to their professional development for a long-term plan as it helps to enhance their awareness of teaching culture as an integral component of language teaching and develop their intercultural perspectives about foreign language teaching.

I would like to invite you to participate in a quasi-experimental study that involves two intact, equivalent EFL classes: the standard class with normal speaking lessons and the Intercultural with intercultural lessons. The intercultural lessons in the Intercultural class are adapted from the same speaking lessons in the Standard class. You will be provided with some theories on intercultural language teaching and learning in order to get some insight into the purposes of the intercultural lessons. I will observe both of your classes over a teaching period of 9 weeks. The classroom observations will focus on the students and their experience of intercultural language learning.

Your teaching periods in the two classes will form the basis of my research project and will be put into a written report on a confidential basis. No other person besides me and my supervisors, Dr. Jonathan Newton and Prof. Janet Holmes, will have access to the data. The thesis will be submitted to the School of Linguistics and Applied Language Studies, and deposited at the Library of Victoria University of Wellington. The results of the research may be presented at academic conferences or published in academic journals. All collected data will be destroyed two years after the end of the project.

If you have any questions or would like to receive further information about the project, please contact me at SiThangKiet.Ho@vuw.ac.nz or my supervisors, Dr Jonathan Newton at Jonathan.Newton@vuw.ac.nz or Prof. Janet Holmes at Janet.Holmes@vuw.ac.nz, School of Linguistics and Applied Language Studies, Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand.

Thank you for your cooperation.

For the benefits of students, the project helps them perceive the importance of culture in language learning and develop their intercultural communicative competence alongside their language proficiency for effective intercultural communication.

I would like to invite you to participate in an experiment over a period of nine weeks with nine lessons. You will be asked to do a pre-test at the beginning and a post-test at the end. Each test lasts for about 15-20 minutes. You will also be asked to write three reflective journals during the period in which you write your reflections on culture-related issues in the lessons. At the end of the period, you will be asked to fill in a short self-evaluation questionnaire and participate in a follow-up focus group interview if you are in the Intercultural class. Focus group interviews will take about 20-30 minutes and will be scheduled at a time that is convenient for you. The self-evaluation questionnaire and the focus group interviews will be looking for your evaluation of the outcomes of the nine lessons you have learned.

The pre-test, post-test, reflective journals, self-evaluation questionnaire and interview data will form the basis of my research project and will be put into a written report on a confidential basis. No participant will be identified personally. No other person besides me and my supervisors, Dr. Jonathan Newton and Prof. Janet Holmes, will have access to the data. Intercultural Competence Inventory

Instructions:
This Intercultural Competence Inventory (adapted from Fantini, 2009) aims to investigate students’ of intercultural communicative competence in order to help them learn English more efficiently and communicate successfully with people from other cultures. Your information provided in this questionnaire is anonymous and will not affect any results of your study. Therefore, please try to evaluate your real ability as honestly and accurately as possible by using the rating scale 1-5 below. Please read each question carefully and consider your best choice in order that this questionnaire can bring out the accurate results for the research. Thank you.

Rating scale:
1 = Not at all
2 = Limited
3 = Moderate
4 = Well enough
5 = Very well

Knowledge

1. I have basic knowledge of the cultural component in the English language. □1 □2 □3 □4 □5
2. I have knowledge of the processes of socialization in my own and the target culture (e.g. formality, interactional norms, taboos, etc.). □1 □2 □3 □4 □5
3. I can contrast important aspects of the target language and culture with my own (e.g. ways of expressing, etc). □1 □2 □3 □4 □5
4. I have knowledge of the national memory of my own culture and how its events are seen from the perspective of other cultures. □1 □2 □3 □4 □5
5. I have knowledge of the national memory of the target culture and how its events are seen from the perspective of my own culture. □1 □2 □3 □4 □5
6. I can cite important historical and socio-political factors that shape my own culture and the target culture.

7. I can describe interactional behaviours common among target culture members in social and professional areas (e.g. family roles, team work, problem-solving, etc.)

8. I can contrast my own behaviours with those of target culture members in important areas (e.g., social interactions, daily routines, etc.)

9. I have knowledge of social distinctions and their principal markers in my own and the target culture (e.g., clothing, food, language variety, non-verbal behaviour, etc).

__________________________

Attitude

I demonstrate

10. willingness to seek out or take up opportunities to engage with the otherness in the target culture.

11. interest in discovering other perspectives on interpretation of familiar and unfamiliar phenomena both in my own and the target culture and cultural practices.

12. willingness to question values or presuppositions in cultural practices and products in one’s own environment.

13. willingness to understand differences in the behaviours, values, attitudes, and styles of target culture members.

14. readiness to engage with the conventions and rites of verbal and non-verbal communication and interaction in the target culture.

15. readiness to deal with different ways of perceiving, expressing, interacting, and behaving in the target culture.

16. readiness to suspend judgments of any strange behaviour and appreciate different ways of communicating and interacting interculturally.
Skills

I am able to

17. interact appropriately in a variety of different social situations in the target culture (e.g. in work, in public places, etc.)

18. monitor my behavior and its impact on my target culture interlocutors.

19. identify similarities and differences in my language and culture and those of the target language and culture in order to ensure thorough understanding in interaction.

20. identify areas of misunderstanding and dysfunction in interactions with target culture members and explain them in terms of each of the cultural systems present.

21. resolve cross-cultural conflicts and misunderstandings in interactions with target culture members to avoid communication breakdown.

Awareness

I demonstrate awareness of

22. myself as a ‘culturally conditioned’ person with personal preferences and habits.

23. identifying and interpreting explicit or implicit values in my own and the target culture.

24. how my cultural values are reflected in specific situations.

25. target culture members’ reactions to me that may reflect their cultural values that are different from mine in specific situations.

26. similarities and differences across my own and the target language and culture.
27. how varied situations may require modifying my interactions with target culture members for appropriateness.

28. differences in ideological perspectives across cultures in order to communicate flexibly with target culture members.

29. possible misconceptions of generalizing individual behaviours as representative of the whole culture.

30. my own level of intercultural development.

Reflective Journal

Name: ……………………………………………………………………………………………

Class: …………………………………………………………………………………………

Journal No.: …………………………………………………………………………………

Date:…………………………………………………………………………………………

Instructions:

This reflective journal aims to investigate the learner process of language and culture acquisition in English with the purpose of helping them to learn English more efficiently and successfully communicate with people from other cultures. You are asked to write three reflective journals over a teaching period of nine weeks. Each journal will contain learner reflections on culture-related activities in the last three English lessons. Please enter your critical reflections in each journal by answering the questions given below. The journal will be collected at the beginning of the fourth lesson. Thank you.

1. Describe some specific culture-related activities that you recall in your last three English lessons.

……………………………………………………………………………………………………

……………………………………………………………………………………………………

2. What were your thoughts and attitudes about the specific activities in each lesson? (e.g. Which activity made you think, surprised or interested you most? How? Why?)

……………………………………………………………………………………………………

……………………………………………………………………………………………………

……………………………………………………………………………………………………

3. What, if anything, did you learn from each of these activities in each lesson? (e.g. about your own culture, English-speaking cultures, communicating with native English speakers, communicating across cultures, etc.)

……………………………………………………………………………………………………

APPENDIX 19

Self-evaluation questionnaire

This questionnaire aims to investigate your self-evaluation on the outcomes of your last nine English speaking lessons. Please circle the level of your satisfaction in each statement with a number from 1-5:

1 = strongly disagree
2 = disagree
3 = neutral
4 = agree
5 = strongly agree

1. I gained deep insight into aspects of my own culture.
   Strongly disagree  1  2  3  4  5  Strongly agree

2. I gained little insight into aspects of the target culture.
   Strongly disagree  1  2  3  4  5  Strongly agree

3. I developed my critical thinking about various aspects of my own culture and the target culture.
   Strongly disagree  1  2  3  4  5  Strongly agree

4. I did not recognize the impact of my own perspectives on understanding other cultures.
   Strongly disagree  1  2  3  4  5  Strongly agree

5. I became more aware of the relationship between language and culture when learning English.
   Strongly disagree  1  2  3  4  5  Strongly agree

6. I learned English with a more effective approach than before.
   Strongly disagree  1  2  3  4  5  Strongly agree

7. Writing the journals had little effect on my culture learning.
   Strongly disagree  1  2  3  4  5  Strongly agree

8. I did not become more motivated to learn English.
   Strongly disagree  1  2  3  4  5  Strongly agree

9. I became more confident in interacting with people from other cultures.
   Strongly disagree  1  2  3  4  5  Strongly agree

APPENDIX 20
Student focus-group interviews (Phase 2)

Instructions
The purpose of the student focus group interviews is to explore in depth students’ experience of learning about language and culture in the nine English lessons of the Speaking course during the semester. The interview was designed with semi-structured questions as below and some other questions may be developed from classroom observations and students’ responses.

Interview questions:
1. What was most distinct about your last nine English lessons?
2. What lessons/activities/aspects of the lessons did you find most useful? How did you experience them in the classroom (your thoughts, your attitudes)?

E.g.:- In your class, you were asked to talk about how to be successful in communication with foreigners. Please tell me about your experience of that activity.

- In your class, you were asked to compare and contrast different ways of keeping pets and animal treatment in Western countries and your native country. Please tell me about your experience of that activity.

3. What particular insights did you obtain from these activities?
4. Did writing the journals have much or little influence on your culture learning? What benefits did you gain from your culture learning journals?
5. In your opinion, was the intercultural approach to language learning in the nine lessons overall more or less effective than the approach to language learning you usually had in the classroom before? Why?
APPENDIX 21

Extract samples of learners’ reflective journals in two classes
(my translation from the learners’ first language)

A. ST class

Student 1 (ST21)

-In Vietnam, a family meal has an important meaning as it reflects the cosy atmosphere of the family, whereas people in Western countries do not consider it much important when they usually eat at the office or outside. Western women seldom do the cooking for the whole family and they usually buy ready-made food. This is the main difference between Vietnamese and Western people.

-I find that Japanese people also have the hospitality like people in my country when receiving guests at home. This shows a very good Eastern tradition when the host prepares all the food for the guests. This is completely different from the pot luck in America in which you have to bring something to share at a potluck. This makes me feel uncomfortable.

-Body language may differ across cultures. For example, in Vietnam, to call a waiter for paying the bill, you can raise your hand and point at your table. Or you want to call a waiter, just raise your hand. I find it similar with other European countries.

-Pets in Vietnam are usually dogs, cats, fish or birds, but in Europe, pets can be horses, snakes or even crocodiles.

-I find a big difference between European countries and Vietnam in the treatment of elderly people. In other countries, elderly people are not much respected. In spite of their good ability, they are not appointed to important positions. Young people are indifferent to them and never greet them. In Vietnam, there is the tradition of ‘Seniores priores’. Vietnamese people hold high esteem of their ancestors and elderly people. Elderly people are still invited to work for some private companies. I wonder why in some countries young people are so indifferent and leave elderly people alone. Is it because of their busy life? From this, I can confirm that Vietnam is a country that has a culture of holding high esteem of ancestors, whereas some other countries do not. In case I encounter such situations, I will not be surprised.

Student 2 (ST28)

-Vietnamese women tend to take care of their families, which is a very good virtue. Western women do not pay much attention to this responsibility as they want to do anything they like.

-English people usually travel on holidays to reduce stress. It is a good way to do it.
- Eye contact is usually made in communication in the target culture, whereas this is not often in my country, which may be due to lack of confidence or just a habit. Eye contact in the target culture means politeness.

- Pets are considered good friends of human beings. They are the friends who only know to listen without asking when we are sad or happy. Therefore they need to be treated well. But if they are treated better than children, it makes me think about it. Pets should not be treated better than children as it is people who are the subjects that make life and develop the country and children are the future masters of a country. Children need to be loved and looked after in the first position. Pets should be loved as friends only, not better than children.

- Children in English-speaking countries are educated with equality with other people. This is interesting but also makes me think. What is interesting here is that life needs equality, not only for oneself but also for others. But people need to respect others and be polite with elderly people, which is a good character and a nice tradition of Eastern people.

- Teaching children equality will help them to live fair with everyone and not to violate others’ interests or rights. This is what we need to learn but we have to live with equality depending on the context and subject. Sometimes we need to be tolerant, know to respect others, especially be polite and profoundly respect elderly people, which will make our relations become close and tight. This is an internal beauty, and moral standards about the dignity of Eastern people. Therefore, we need to learn and maintain the character of Eastern people.

- The personality and lifestyle of men and women differ across cultures. Each living environment and lifestyle form different personality for each person, which becomes a particular feature for people in each country. For example, Asian women started education later so they are not as confident as Western women. Asian men tend to be bossy due to the influence of feudal ideology, whereas Western men are equal with their wife in family life. We should accept personality traits and the roles of men and women in each culture. However, the equality between men and women in society and family should be promoted.

- The potluck supper in America makes me very surprised as I have never seen such a party that is interesting and mysterious until the last minute. Although we do not have pot luck in Vietnam, but I think this kind of party is a good way to develop exchanges, solidarity and friendliness with other people.

- Gestures make our communication more interesting and easier to understand, especially it is very useful in intercultural communication. However, each country, each culture has different norms for gestures. The same gesture may mean different in two different countries or with the same message each country may have different expressions. For example, to call a person from a distance, English people turn their palm up and wave it, which is a way to call an animal in our country. If I was not aware of this, I would be shocked as we turn down the palm and wave it to call a person. The gesture of calling a person using the palm in an upward position, which is considered to be a way of calling a dog according to Vietnamese people’s way of thinking, should be reconsidered. It is possible that what is good and polite for someone in one culture does not necessarily mean the same to others from another culture and vice versa. We should accept and learn from what we consider not good for our own culture, but may be good in another culture.

- Pets are treated well in Australia: they are given all concerns as a person. A person from another culture will get shocked when an Australian shared half of the rice she cooked for the guest and the other half for her dog. But this is as normal as the way they bring their pets to school or for a walk in the park. These differences mainly come from differences in lifestyle, ideology and customs.

- I think each educational system has its own values. For example, while Vietnamese children learn to be polite with parents, teachers and adults, children in English-speaking countries learn self-reliant skills and life skills. The educational values correspond to the norms of society in each culture.

- The expression ‘You can’t teach an old dog new tricks’ means that old people are usually conservative about their viewpoint. In fact, many people in Western countries are very dynamic and learn a lot around them. Elderly people in English-speaking countries live on their own or in nursing homes. They appreciate living independently. They want their children to live independently and they also want to do that.

- Differences between cultivation culture and nomadic culture or between agricultural culture and industrial culture lead to different perspectives about men and women in my country and English-speaking countries.

- In English-speaking countries, guests can be invited by phone; they usually take some flowers or wine but not food. When I am a guest of a host in an English-speaking country, I’m sure that I will not make any mistakes in communication and behaviours.

- Each culture has different norms of interaction. Some behaviour is normal and polite in one culture but it is not in another culture. Different norms of interaction across cultures are the big challenge in intercultural communication as they may be a barrier for people who do not share the same language. In English-speaking countries, people usually keep an appropriate distance between two interlocutors, and both need to be willing for communication. In spite of cultural barriers, we feel very interested in discovering the target culture with curiosity. Culture is always a hot issue through many generations.

- The lesson about Animals also helped me understand how English people treat their pets. Pets are treated very well like children in England. For example, they are given good food, taken out for a walk, etc. It is because people consider pets to be friends and share their feelings with them when they are sad. Also, as people have a better life, so they can take better care of their pets. This is the reason why pets are very close to English people. The treatment of pets like children in Britain is completely different from Vietnam. It is because the relations among family members in Britain are different from that in Vietnam. We can easily see that a dog is included as a family member in an English family. We need to love pets and treat them like a family member. We learn this from the way English people treat their pets. This is a good cultural feature we need to learn. We also need to think about the treatment of pets in Vietnam. It is necessary to protect and take good care of pets, as well as condemning any maltreatment of them.

- In Western countries, children at the age of kindergarten are educated to have a balanced life between play and learning and participate in different things in life, which makes them become more active and self-confident. The relationship between the teacher and students in Canada is equal. To finish a meeting, students usually clap their hands, which is a sign of politeness.

- I highly respect the way elderly people are treated in my country as it is a good tradition that is maintained and promoted. In spite of this, I still accept the way elderly people are treated in Western countries as this is their culture where people get used to living independently from very young age and because of this they prefer this freedom. Being aware of this way of treatment towards elderly people, I will not get shocked and easily adapt and communicate better with people from the target culture.
